Statutory other measures: April 2019

With four exceptions, countries include some provision to take leave in the case of the illness of a child. For European Union member states, the Parental leave directive gives all workers an entitlement to 'time off from work on grounds of force majeure for urgent family reasons in cases of sickness or accident making their immediate presence indispensable,' without specifying minimum requirements for length of time or payment. In some cases, leave is allocated in the number of days in total in a given year; in others, it is allocated in terms of number of days per illness. Leave is often paid and often at a high level of income replacement, usually without an upper limit. In some cases, the length of leave entitlement decreases as children get older. Along with length, payment varies considerably.

Many countries also offer additional leave entitlements to care for their family members, in some cases (e.g. Brazil and Malta) for public sector employees only. Conditions for taking leave vary, from countries where leave is available in the case of ordinary illness, through to countries where it is confined to the serious or terminal illness or care of a very dependent relative. There may be further provisions to care for dependants with disabilities, and, for these, please consult the country notes. Length, payment, and other dimensions of leave also vary considerably.

Legislation which entitles women to reduce working hours specifically during their child's early months is reasonably common across the countries in the review. In most cases, this is to facilitate the (breast)feeding of the child; but in several cases, it has become a general right that can be taken for any reason and/or by the father (e.g. Japan, Portugal, Slovenia, and Spain). Women reducing their hours in this way are entitled to earnings compensation, except in Cyprus, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, and Romania. In Spain, reduced daily hours can be consolidated into full-time leave, thus, in practice, extending Maternity leave by between two to four weeks.

Finally, in a handful of countries, parents have a legal right to request flexible working hours from their employers, who must consider their request and may only refuse it if there is a clear business case for doing so. In Bulgaria, mothers of children under six years of age have the right to ask to work from home.<sup>57</sup> Portugal is the only country with an entitlement to flexible working; parents with children below 12 years of age (no age limit in the case of a child who is chronically ill or disabled living in the same household) are entitled to flexible working, which means that the employee may choose, within certain limits, when to start and finish daily work. In Iceland, employers are required to make the necessary arrangements to enable employees to balance family life and work, including the arrangement of work in a flexible manner.

In most countries, adoptive parents have similar leave entitlements to other parents.

The number of ● indicates statutory entitlement and level of payment. Please see the key at the end of the table for further information.

&lt;sup>57</sup> Although there is this statutory right of remote working for mothers with children under the age of six, in practice this is non-applicable. This is because employers in the private sector refuse flexible or remote working, based on the argument that private sector jobs require strict working hours and physical presence. This affects the majority of young Bulgarian women who primarily work in this sector. See additional comments in the Bulgarian country note.
